Original glass art will be for sale from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. on Saturday at the University Glass House. All the work for sale was made by ISU undergraduate and graduate art students.

The Glass House is just west of the corner of Willow and Main streets and north of Hancock Stadium.

During the sale there will be demonstrations done at three stations in the hot shop. Miller will be demonstrating glass blowing techniques along with his students.

“There’s going to be about 500 or 600 pieces of glass for sale for Christmas that’s functional stuff: ornaments, paperweights and then sculptures as well — anywhere from $10 to $3,500,” John Miller, associate professor and head of the glass program, explained.

“Some of the work has been from the class assignments and some of it is just based on production,” he added.

The program is considered a mixed media sculpture program specializing in glass. Glass classes have been filling up, and the program is now about four times larger than it has been in years past. A lot more students are also adding the glass program as a second major.
